2006-06-18. Archive for the 'insane' Category I was talking with a friend the other day about racism. I asked him if he has ever been called a nigger. His response was 'I have never been called a nigger and I doubt it ever will.' I was surprised. Why? Because he is one of the few people I know who is black. He comes from a black family. He has black friends. He lives in a predominantly black neighborhood. And, if he feels discriminated against, it is not because he is black but because of his personality. This experience is not uncommon. I know a number of people who have never been called a nigger. They are white. They are in predominantly black neighborhoods. They attend black colleges. And they are just as black as he is. But, they have never been called a nigger. What does it mean to be called a nigger? To be called a nigger is to be called someone who looks, acts, or sounds like the slave race. Whether your skin is light brown, light black, medium brown or medium black does not matter. If you are black then you are called a nigger. If you are white then you are not called a nigger. So, in fact, your skin color is irrelevant. Since the slave race was black, it is not difficult to understand why the slave race is called the nigger race. But, even though it is not difficult to understand, it is still difficult to accept. If you do accept it, then you must come to the conclusion that the black race are all nigger. This is like denying that $1+1=2$. So, why do people have a difficult time with this? It is easier to blame the nigger race for their own behavior than to admit that they are all the same. When the nigger race, who are black, are treated badly, it is easy for a white person to blame the nigger race. When the nigger race, who are black, are treated well, it is easy for a black person to blame the white race. The other reason that it is difficult to accept is that the nigger race has been treated badly for so long that we have lost our collective memories. In fact, if you ask a black person to describe a nigger, they will tell you that it is someone who looks black. If you ask a 82157476af
